Message from the Cabinet Secretary

Hon. Hanna Wendot Cheptumo
Cabinet Secretary
Ministry of Gender, Culture and Children Services

It is with great honour and joy that I welcome you to the Third International Conference on Child Protection in Africa (ICCP 2025), held under the theme “Child Protection and Climate Change.” The purpose of this conference is to deepen our collective understanding of the intersection between child protection and climate change, and to develop practical strategies that ensure the well-being, safety, and resilience of all children across Africa in the face of climate-related challenges.

This year’s conference is both timely and urgent. Across Africa, climate change is not only an environmental concern but a growing child rights challenge affecting children’s safety, health, education, and well-being. The discussions we hold here will shape how our continent strengthens resilience and ensures that every child thrives, even in the face of climate adversity.

We are deeply honoured by the presence of His Excellency Prof. Kithure Kindiki, Deputy President of the Republic of Kenya, our Guest of Honour, whose attendance demonstrates the Government’s unwavering commitment to child rights and protection.

I extend a warm welcome to our distinguished guests from across Africa and beyond, as well as to our partners from development agencies, academia, and civil society, and especially to the children who have joined us at this conference. Their voices remind us why we are here to build a safer, kinder, and more sustainable future for every child.

Let this conference inspire bold action and collaboration, ensuring that the protection and empowerment of children remain central to our climate and development agendas.

Welcome to ICCP 2025.
Asanteni sana.

Message from the Principal Secretary

CPA Carren Ageng'o
Principal Secretary
*State Department for Children
Services*

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to the Third International Conference on Child Protection in Africa (ICCP 2025). This gathering provides an important platform to turn dialogue and research into actionable steps that make child protection systems more responsive to the growing challenges posed by climate change.

We are deeply honoured by the presence of His Excellency Prof. Kithure Kindiki, Deputy President of the Republic of Kenya, our Guest of Honour. His participation affirms the Government's strong commitment to safeguarding the rights and well-being of children. I also extend my appreciation to Mrs Hanna Wendot Cheptumo, EGH, Cabinet Secretary for Gender, Culture and Children Services, for her visionary leadership and support in advancing this agenda.

Our shared goal is to ensure that the outcomes of this conference directly benefit children through stronger community-based protection systems, improved coordination across sectors, and sustained investment in child protection and climate-resilient programmes for vulnerable families.

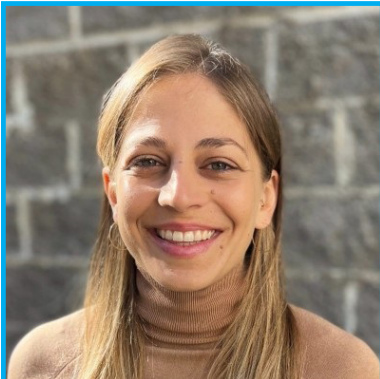

I am especially pleased that children are not only represented here but are active contributors to the conference. Their insights and lived experiences will guide us in developing practical, inclusive, and sustainable solutions that reflect their realities.

I extend heartfelt appreciation to our partners from the United Nations bodies, Non Governmental Organizations, academic institutions, and others for their collaboration and continued support.

May this conference result in concrete actions and enduring partnerships that keep children at the heart of climate action and national development.
